HANDS ON WOOD DEBUTS IN BUILDING F WORKSHOP

The woodworker's art—steeped in tradition, fine-tuned through the practice of technical skills—seems like an almost magical process to those who lack the training or artistic talent. The artisan's innate sense of what to do with texture, light, grain and color produce masterful creations which not only delight the eye but provide years of pleasure and usefullness.

This September, an unusually extensive program in woodworking will be offered at Fort Mason Center. Hands on Wood was organized by Jon Lopez, who holds a Master's Degree in Fine Arts from the Otis Institute in Los Angeles. Lopez is also an accomplished boatbuilder, a craft he learned while living in Spain. When he returned to Berkeley, he began teaching woodworking classes at The Cutting Edge (a fine-tools store). After the store closed due to corporate difficulties, Lopez and his associates found that the discontinuation of their woodworking program caused ". . . an outcry from students and community alike. . . ." So they set about looking for a location which would reflect their new nonprofit status, where they could continue to teach others in a creative environment. Finally, Building F at Fort Mason Center was chosen as the site for classes. Students and instructors now eagerly await the September 12 opening.

Recently, Lopez was commissioned by the Democratic Convention Committee to make a special gavel from native California hardwoods to be presented to the Chiarman of the Democratic National Committee, Charles Manatt. On the oversized gavel was a plate made by jeweler Sydney Mobel enscribed with a tribute to the late Representative Phillip Burton, who was instrumental in initiating the legislation to create the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, of which Fort Mason Center is a part. The giant gavel was so well-received that the members of the Convention commissioned 24 smaller gavels. Later, just a week and a half before the Convention began, Lopez received an additional assignment to make the Seal of the Democratic National Convention, to be displayed on the front of the podium. Fortunately, Lopez was able to enlist "a little help from his friends" and bolted the finished seal to the podium just one hour before the opening rehearsals.

The first two months of classes at Hands on Wood will primarily be devoted to boatbuilding and carving. Classes range from an intense one-week course on building a traditional lapstrake dinghy, to a four-session class in making a wooden xylophone. Rocking Horse Carving, Marquetry, 19th Century Toymaking for Children, and Traditional Oarmaking are among the other workshops being offered.

On November 3, during the Annual Fall Antiques Show, Lopez and some of his thirty expert instructors will hold an open house to demonstrate furniture making, restoration, and polishing techniques and to present a display of finished work. After this, the Hands on Wood classes will focus on furniture making and antique restoration.

Classes are priced from $25 to $250 depending on the length of the class and the complexity of the work involved. For registration and information, please call (415) 567-2205.

FORT MASON CENTER UPDATE

October 7, The San Francisco Firefighters' 5th Annual Chili Cook-Off offers refreshments, entertainment, dancing, imaginatively decorated booths and chili samples, of course. Various North Beach restauranteers and members of the International Chili Association will be on hand to taste and rate the best chili concoctions prepared by teams from 40 local firehouses.

Celebrate Halloween this year at the fourth annual San Francisco Children's Fair October 27-28. Lively entertainment, games, crafts, educational displays and many other activities have been especially designed for kids and their parents. Also that weekend, the 5th Annual Pacific Arts & Letters Small Press Bookfair will be at the Center. It includes book exhibits, open mike readings, video & computer displays, interpreters for the deaf and much more.

October 31–November 4, a magnificent showcase of antiques will once again transform an old pier into the San Francisco Fall Antiques Show. This year's special attraction features 28 handcrafted miniature reproductions of period rooms by Eugene Kupjack. Procedes benefit Enterprise For High School Students, Inc., a non-profit student job referral service.

NEW THEATER SEASON BRINGS NEW EXCITEMENT

San Francisco's theater world involves one of those which-came-first riddles: is it the enlightened and discriminating theater audience which engenders the lively and innovative local theater scene, or does the local theater community win their following with their exciting and vital presentations? Either way, this fourteenth largest city in the nation supports the third largest theater market; this disparity is certainly to the advantage of theatergoers. Here, at Fort Mason Center, we are proud to be the home of several noteworthy theater organizations. An in-depth look at the plans of two of those groups reveals something of the diversity and, well, magic of our theater.

MAGIC THEATRE

Entering its eighteenth season, the Magic Theatre remains as innovative and provocative as ever. As noted in the London Times, "some of the most interesting experimental theatre in America. . . is going on at the Magic Theatre."

The new season begins with the West Coast premiere of Geniuses, by Jonathan Reynolds, a satirical comedy revolving around a fictionalized Bay Area filmmaker (no names!), making a monumental war movie in the tropics (any guesses?). During its run in New York, the play won excellent reviews; the Magic regards its acquisition of Geniuses, as Publicist Charlotte Seligman puts it, as "something of a coup."

The performance troupe SOON 3 returns to the Magic Theatre in October with another of their "performance landscapes," OUTCALLS/ RIP TIDES. SOON 3's work, under the direction of Alan and Bean Finneran is highly visual, often startling; it stretches the boundaries and definitions of theater.

Since its inception, the Magic Theatre has been dedicated to the development of new playwrights. This year, that commitment takes a new form via Magic's involvement in the New Plays Program sponsored by the Foundation of the Dramatists Guild and CBS. The Magic Theatre was chosen as one out of only five theaters nationwide to participate in the program. Over a thousand scripts will be read to select one play for production next spring. A jury composed of prominent members of the theater community will then select the best of the five new works; the winning playwright will receive $10,000 and, more importantly, national attention.

Plans for the remainder of the Magic's new season are, by design, fairly fluid, thus enabling the Magic to present the most exciting and important new plays. A play by Sam Shepard will definitely be produced; a new work by Adele Edling Shank is a distinct possibility. Fortunately, Magic Theatre's subscription campaign is still underway; the Subscription Hotline number is 441-8824.

PEOPLE'S THEATER COALITION

The People's Theater Coalition breaks new ground this season by presenting Asian American Theater Company as its first-ever resident company. The Coalition, a membership organization representing nineteen local theater groups, believes this arrangement will be a fruitful one; the AATC is delighted with the move to Fort Mason Center.

The Asian American Theater Company begins its tenure at People's Theater this month with the world premiere of Once Is Never Enough (the sequel to the 1981 hit, Yellow Fever), in which Sam Shikaze, private eye, learns that cocaine and Big Business are turning Japantown upside-down. Later in the season, the AATC will present The Sound and the Beauty which will be followed by "SHIN SEKI" (New World) and then by Zatoichi Superstar.

Ever in the vanguard, the Coalition is, in Theater Manager Joe Lambert's words, "demonstrating its commitment to initiating and organizing theater of the people on a national and international scale" by presenting Nixtaylero (Morning Star), Nicaragua's most prominent theater group. This will be Nixtaylero's first visit to the United States; People's Theater Coalition will sponsor and coordinate several appearances by Nixtaylero throughout the Bay Area.

Planned for February is a People's Festival of Dance, which will explore physical movement in the broader context of social movements and social concerns. Major renovations are also scheduled for the near future, thereby enabling the Coalition to expand their program. For further information on any of People's Theater Coalition's activities, call the box office at 776-8999.
